The Glorious Fourth.

The Glorious Fourth was not by any means a noisy one in Paris. Aside from an occasional explosion of a cannon fire cracker or torpedo or a few flashes of the Roman candle after dark, it would have been an unusual dull day in Paris. Few people could be seen on the streets, as most of the merchants gave their clerks holiday and closed their doors. It is said that everybody went to Lexington to see the air ship that didn't sail. It turned out to be a fluke, and you could see a crowd of disappointed and sore people when the trains arrived from Lexington.
